

Self Observation Logs:->

Day -> 1

Daily activity

Took break fast Late in morning

Observation

I felt low energy and difficulty concentrating

Completed my pending work on time

I felt satisfied and peaceful mentally

Watching video for relaxation

It give temporary happiness but wasted of time

Day 2:->

Daily activity

1) Slept properly for 7 hour

Observation

I felt fresh and active all the day

2) Felt upset after comparing myself with other

I felt mentally disturbed and less confident

3) Ate healthy food and drank enough water

my body felt energetic and healthy

Day 3→

Daily activity

Went for a short walk in the evening

1) Control my anger
during an argument

2) spent some quite time thinkin about goals

Observation

I felt reborn and refreshed.

I felt calm and mentally stable afterward.

It gave me clarity and motivation.

Reflection :->

Through the self observation ~~activity~~ or activity and digital poster on sanyam (self-regulation), I learned the importance of understanding both physical and psychological needs in daily life. During the 3-days observation, I categorize activities like sleeping, eating, etc.

I realized that physical needs are limited and temporary, but psychological things are continuous for long time. For example, food satisfies hunger for some time, but inner happiness and peace are required for positive living, good relationships.

The digital poster on Sanyam taught me that self-regulation is very important in modern life. It helps us control ^{unnecessary} ~~unnecessary~~ desires, manage time properly and avoid distraction.

By doing both this activity, I understood that happiness ~~is~~ comes from maintaining harmony between physical comfort and inner well-being. Distinguishing between body and self helps in making better decisions and developing natural acceptance, self-awareness.